The power of a portfolio

Investing needn't be complicated: expert advice and a diversified strategy go a long way towards growing wealth

David Prosser

Are you an investor? You may not think so, but if you have any savings – from a few pounds in the bank to pension contributions at work – you have already started making investment decisions. While it's easy to be intimidated by the mystique surrounding investment, the secret boils down to consistency, discipline and common sense.

Seeking financial advice will help – but don't go looking for an investment guru, says James Reiss, CEO of wealth manager David James Wealth. "Find someone who will be a planner, rather than an investment adviser," Reiss says. "You'll still end up with a set of investments, but they'll be tailored to give you the best chance of achieving your financial goals."

It's a critical point, says Natalie Wright, UK head of family business at the accountant and financial adviser Forvis Mazars. "Investment is about managing your money so you're able to do the things you want to in the future, from supporting your family to retiring comfortably."

In practice, that means building a diversified portfolio: a set of investments chosen with your goals and attitude to risk in mind.

There are lots of options. People often think of investment as putting money into the stock market, but other opportunities include bonds (essentially loans to governments and other companies), property, commodities, infrastructure and cash.

Each of these investments – or asset classes – comes with a different risk and return profile. Some assets, including the stock market, have the potential to deliver higher returns over the longer term, but with more ups and downs along the way. Others are more suitable for shorter-term horizons because they carry less risk, but the return potential will also be lower.

The good news is you don't have to do all the work yourself. Most investors use investment funds to get exposure to the asset classes they want. These funds are run by professional managers who pool your money with contributions from other investors. You can put in a lump sum up front or make regular savings, and you're usually entitled to withdraw money whenever you choose.

Some funds are actively managed: the manager chooses the investments they expect to do best in a given asset class. Others are passive: they automatically track the performance of a specific index – the average performance across a particular stock market or set of investments. Funds that track the performance of the FTSE 100 index of the largest UK companies are a good example.

If you have any savings – from a few pounds in the bank to pension contributions at work – you have already started making investment decisions.

"An index can be thought of as a recipe in a cookery book," says Katya Nelyudova, head of sales EMEA at FTSE Russell. "It sets out the ingredients necessary to make a dish, together with the instructions to combine them. FTSE Russell produces the recipes that fund managers like BlackRock follow," she says. "But the index is not the dish itself – it's the guide. The rules of an index help produce the desired dish – a fund's constituents. Therefore, the right investment starts with the right index. And your choice of index really matters."

How, then, to build the right portfolio? This is where a financial adviser can help. They'll ask you why you're investing, then advise you on how to build a portfolio.

For example, if all your financial goals are long term (saving for retirement in 30 years), you can afford to be more aggressive. If you're going to need access to your money sooner (buying a house in three years), you need to be more cautious because you don't have time to recover from any setbacks.

Grasping this principle is the key to good investment planning, says Reiss. "Investment products are actually the last thing we talk to clients about," he says. "We start by understanding their objectives and work backwards." Advisers can also help with tax efficiency, he points out. For example, holding your investments inside an individual savings account (Isa) will shelter all income and profits from tax.

Some investors prefer to buy different funds to get exposure to each of the asset classes they're interested in. But another possibility is a multi-asset fund that holds lots of different types of investment all at once, explains Heather Christie, head of UK adviser sales at the investment manager BlackRock.

"A multi-asset fund is like a basket that holds different types of investments, such as stocks, bonds and real estate. This mix helps to spread risk, so if one investment doesn't do well, others might still perform better," she says. "A pre-built portfolio option, like a multi-asset fund, is particularly useful for investors who don't have the time or expertise to build their own portfolio."

Exploring new technologies can also help. There are a growing number of online platforms that will automatically suggest an investment portfolio based on the information you provide about your goals and your attitude to risk.

The bottom line? Investment is far more accessible than many people realise – don't be put off by the jargon or the mystique. With support from the right advisers and experts, everyone is capable of building an investment portfolio for their financial goals.

EXPERT GUIDANCE FOR LASTING GAINS

From tax efficiency to investment strategy, an accredited specialist keeps you on track and helps you avoid costly mistakes

Leah Milner

For those who have never used a financial adviser before, the idea of spending several thousand pounds per year or more for their wisdom might feel hard to justify.

But for millions of people it is money well spent, as research from insurance and investment firm Royal London shows two thirds of clients who pay for professional financial advice believe it delivers good or excellent value.

A good adviser should ensure you more than recoup the cost of their fees in the financial returns and cost savings that they help you achieve in the long run. Beyond this, other potential benefits are hard to quantify in pounds and pence – whether that is making sure your loved ones are financially protected should the worst happen or helping you avoid costly mistakes in times of market turbulence.

"Most people spend so much of their lives working – we are here to make sure they make the most of what they have and of their financial future," says Steven Pyne, chartered financial planner and managing partner at Holden & Partners.

"A good financial planner will work out where you want to be and the best way of getting there. But importantly, along that journey, they are going to make sure you do certain things and stop you from doing others that might be detrimental to your financial wellbeing."

Priorities might shift as you move through your life and an adviser should help you make adjustments as needed to ensure you are on the right track. This means making the most of tax breaks, ISA allowances and paying enough into a pension.

Pyne says: "Unfortunately, for whatever reason, we often come across fairly sophisticated clients who are neglecting the basics. Everyone is time-poor in this day and age and a financial planner will add significant value here."

Enthusiastic investors can easily go off course without the guidance of a professional who understands risk and how to manage it by building a properly diversified portfolio. Katharine Ross, financial planner at Smith & Wardle, says: "We get clients who have started investing on their own. While it's great they have done something, they have ended up with an enormous portfolio of stocks and investments to keep track of and they are overwhelmed."

Another danger here is that investors end up with a portfolio that is not properly diversified so the risk is highly contingent on the fortunes of a particular country, sector or, worse, on an individual fund or company.

Because of employer share-save schemes it is common for investors to hold stock in companies where they work – meaning they are doubly exposed to both redundancy risk and investment losses should that business get into difficulty, Ross explains. Financial planners will encourage you to hold a wide spread of different investments to manage risk effectively.

Psychological biases and emotional reactions can also pose dangers for novice investors who try to go it alone. Luke Neves, a financial planner and associate director at The Penny Group, part of The Openwork

Two thirds of clients who pay for professional financial advice believe it delivers good or excellent value.

Partnership, says: "We saw this when Covid hit and the markets tanked. Clients were panicked and thought they should cut their losses and sell their assets. We were talking them back from the brink to stop them from selling.

"Then in the space of six months from March 2020 to September 2020, we saw the market bounce back. Many investors who did not have a trusted adviser on the end of the phone may have made rash decisions and locked in those losses."

Financial advisers use software to help give their clients a 360-degree view of their pensions, investments and savings in one place. This makes it easier to manage risk across their portfolio. By working with an adviser, you can also use the software to make projections for the future and see whether you are on track to reach your goals – say, retiring at your chosen age with a certain level of income and no mortgage debt.

"These cashflow modelling tools paint a picture of what your financial future will look like and allow you to understand the impact of decisions you make now," says Ross. Once you have got a plan in place, your adviser will keep you up to date with regular check-ins, depending on your needs and market events. You should also be able to log in and view how your investments are doing at any time.

For Neves, peace of mind is an overlooked benefit clients gain from taking advice. "It is knowing you can sleep at night, having someone qualified in the field looking after your money. They are going to be on the other end of the phone if something goes wrong and can provide reassurance that everything is not as bad as it might seem. But equally, if changes are needed, they are going to be proactive and make tweaks to ensure you stay on track."

All new governments make changes and the Labour administration that took office last July is no exception: it has already announced a raft of reforms that could have a significant impact both on your finances and your financial planning.

Taking the time to understand these changes and reacting accordingly is important, says William Stevens, head of financial planning at wealth management firm Killik & Co, but a good financial adviser should be able to help. “An adviser will look at how your long-term plans might need to change according to what’s happening in the short term,” he says.

First, the good news: Labour has so far stuck to its pledge not to increase income tax, national insurance and VAT rates, at least for individuals. That protects your post-tax earnings – and if you’re on a lower income, a significant rise in the minimum wage should also provide help.

However, November’s budget did introduce tax rises in other areas. Capital gains tax, payable on investment profits above £3,000 in any single tax year, has already gone up; basic rate taxpayers now pay 18 per cent, an increase from 10 per cent previously, while higher rate taxpayers pay 24 per cent, up from 20 per cent.

The rules on inheritance tax are also changing. Most significantly, from April 2027, money left in your pension when you die will begin counting as part of your estate for inheritance tax purposes; that means your heirs may have to pay duty on the money, with inheritance tax due on estates worth more than £325,000.

Controversially, the generosity of special exemptions for business owners – including farmers – have been reduced. Still, financial advisers can help you to navigate these reforms – mitigating some of the additional taxes you and your family might now face, and adjusting your plans where necessary. “So much has changed and there will be more to come,” says Ola Abdul, CEO of Fundment, which provides technology to help financial advisers serve their clients. “Advisers need to make sure they have the right tools to work with clients effectively, and many now see themselves as financial doctors – providing ongoing financial care as it is needed.”

For example, advisers will steer you towards tax-efficient savings structures. First, everyone has an individual savings account (Isa) entitlement; you can invest up to £20,000 a year into an Isa, and all income and gains – of whatever size – will be tax-free. That’s even more valuable with capital gains tax going up.

“Many advisers now see themselves as financial doctors, providing their clients with ongoing financial care as it is needed”

Similarly, contributions to private pensions – both workplace and individual plans – are tax-efficient. You get tax relief on these payments – free cash from the government – and all your savings grow free of tax, just like in an Isa. Other options include the enterprise investment scheme and venture capital trusts; both offer a range of tax breaks, but require you to invest in smaller, riskier businesses.

Advisers will also ensure you’re making the most of various allowances. You can earn up to £500 in dividend income each year with no tax to pay; that can be useful if you have investments, but also if you run your own business and pay yourself this way. You also get £3,000 worth of capital gains tax free each year; an adviser may suggest you take some profits from your investments to make the best use of this allowance.

On inheritance tax, there are opportunities to plan ahead. Couples get their own inheritance tax allowances and can pass these on to each other, increasing the value of their tax-free estates to £650,000. Special rules applying to your home can increase this to £1 million. You can also reduce the value of your estate by giving some of it away during your lifetime; an adviser might suggest taking out life insurance to cover the bill.

“The extension of inheritance tax to pensions should also give pause for thought,” adds Stevens. “Currently, it makes sense to draw on other savings

“The extension of inheritance tax to pensions should also give pause for thought. Currently, any unused pension cash can be passed on free of tax; in future, some families may want to rethink that approach.” first when you reach retirement, because any unused pension cash can be passed on free of tax; in future, some families may want to rethink that approach.”

The more complex or specialist your finances, the more it makes sense to seek expert advice. Small business owners will certainly want to discuss their situation with an adviser, as the new capital gains tax rates could significantly increase the tax bill when they sell up and the inheritance tax reforms are also a concern. Farmers need help too.

Advice needn’t be face to face – many advisers are investing in technological solutions that enable clients to get help remotely through multiple channels. That may be more convenient – and give you access to help straight away as the government continues to make further changes. “You can now get real-time data or use super apps to keep a constant watch on your portfolio,” says Abdul. “As the environment becomes more complex and changeable, that can help you to keep up.”

THE GUIDE’S MISSION

It’s a frustrating imbalance. Millions of Brits who could benefit from financial advice don’t access it. Yet, almost all of those who do access financial advice find it valuable: our data shows that 98% would recommend their adviser.

The 2025 Top Rated Financial Adviser Guide sets out to demystify the advice landscape and points to the advisers (and financial coaches) who do brilliant work for their clients. As decided by...their clients.

In total, 2,633 advisers and coaches from 1,352 different firms are included in the 2025 Guide. They collected 61,686 reviews last year with an average rating of 4.89 out of 5.

Each adviser has been endorsed by at least 10 clients, and is a fully verified member of VouchedFor - so we’ve checked that they have the necessary permissions to practice.

We also check advisers’ identity, qualifications and client reviews, and we monitor the outcomes for everyone who contacts an adviser through VouchedFor.

At the end of the Guide you will find a Top Rated Firm section, celebrating firms who regularly monitor feedback from all their clients, and perform well against industry benchmarks.

All we do at VouchedFor is driven by the mission to help people access the best advice for them. The 2025 Guide is an important part of our efforts, and I sincerely hope you find it valuable.

HOW TO USE THE GUIDE

Advisers in this Guide are members of VouchedFor, which involves a low monthly cost so we can verify their client feedback and qualifications. Here are 6 top tips to help choose which adviser is best for you.

1 UNDERSTAND DIFFERENT ADVISER TYPES

Each Top Rated Adviser’s services can be found on their VouchedFor profile.

2 ASK HOW MANY CLIENTS THE ADVISER HAS

It’s helpful to know what percentage of an adviser’s clients have left them reviews.

3 READ REVIEWS LEFT BY PEOPLE LIKE YOU

Filter an adviser’s reviews based on criteria that match your needs.

Still struggling? We’d love to help – please contact us on customer_service@vouchedfor.co.uk or call 0203 111 0580

4 LOOK FOR RECENT REVIEWS

These are a stronger indicator of current service levels than older reviews.

5 CHECK HOW MANY YEARS THE ADVISER HAS BEEN TOP RATED (THE MAX. IS 7)

This shows an adviser has invited regular feedback for a long time.

6 LOOK AT THE ADVISER’S QUALIFICATIONS

Some advisers have advanced qualifications which we don’t have space to list here; you can find them on their VouchedFor profile.

THE PSYCHOLOGY OF LOSS AND GAIN

Money matters can, understandably, go hand in hand with emotions – but emotions can also lead to mistakes.

The lottery effect, as behavioural psychologists call it, can tempt people to chase “hot” stocks or funds, even though they’re not suitable for their financial objectives or carry more risk than is appropriate.

Fear of missing out can make investors become fixated on the money they could have made from an investment, leading them to abandon sensible financial planning.

People’s reactions to losses are particularly powerful. One study found that losing £100 can feel twice as painful as the positivity felt from gaining £100. As a result, investors are often tempted to sell out of loss-making investments – for fear of their losses getting worse – even though this means missing out on a recovery and potential medium and long-term gains. Being aware of these emotional biases can help you to remain disciplined. A good financial adviser will also help support you through your natural emotional responses.

The key is to have a plan and then to stay focused on your long-term goals rather than getting hung up on short-term changes.

“Planning investments with specific goals helps investors select the right products and stay motivated,” says BlackRock’s Heather Christie.

“Goals-based investing aligns investments with your timeline and risk tolerance, leading to smarter decisions on products and easier progress tracking.”

MAKING SENSE OF MORTGAGES

Dan and Lizzie McNulty (and their dog Thor) are preparing to upsize

From fixed and variable rates to income protection, there's a lot to understand. But with guidance from a trusted broker, getting on the property ladder can be made more accessible, as one couple discovered.

When Dan and Lizzie McNulty bought their first home in Bangor, Co Down, six years ago they turned to Navigate Mortgages director Paul Shannon to help them cut through the financial jargon and find the best deal.

“Buying a home is daunting – it’s not something they teach you in school

“As first-time buyers it was really quite daunting,” says Lizzie, 32, a hairdresser. “We didn’t know if we needed a fixed rate or a variable rate – it’s not something they teach you in school. Our broker, Paul, really helped us to understand it all.”

Dan, 33, a software developer, says: “Paul got us access to cheaper mortgage rates and he also chatted to us about life insurance and other types of protection.”

It was thanks to Paul’s advice that the couple took out income protection to cover their earnings if one of them was unable to work. This proved vital in covering the mortgage and other bills when Lizzie broke a finger and was unable to work as a hairdresser for six weeks. “I’ve since encouraged all my colleagues at the salon to get income protection,” she says.

But a lot has changed since the couple first got on to the housing ladder with Paul’s help. Dan and Lizzie are now married with a one- year-old daughter, Willow, and are about to move up the ladder to a bigger home in the coming weeks.

“Paul helped us to get a larger mortgage so that we could upsize to a place with more space for Willow to run around,” Lizzie says. “We loved our first home and it was a stepping stone, but eventually you just grow out of a house and need a wee bit more family space.

“The new house has got a spare room and bigger garden for Willow to play in,” she says. “And it’s slightly closer to the school that we are

Unfairly uninsured

How one woman overcame being denied cover because of her type 1 diabetes

After weeks of searching on price comparison websites and phoning insurers, Sophie Collins had almost given up hope of finding an income protection policy that would accept her.

The 36-year-old from Peterborough was diagnosed with type 1 diabetes as a child, which she manages well with no other complications. She wanted to take out income protection to help cover her mortgage and car finance if she were unable to work in the future due to illness.

Collins was conscious that she couldn't get cover for time off due to the diabetes itself as existing conditions are excluded. But she still wanted protection in the event of other health problems or injuries.

"It was soul-destroying because I'm in my thirties and probably fitter and healthier than many people who don't have diabetes," says Collins.

"But as soon as an insurer hears that you are diabetic they shut the door in your face. Because it's considered to be a high-risk condition and there is the potential for complications they don't want to touch it."

Collins spoke to one financial adviser who could not help her before she eventually found assistance with a specialist firm, Lifesearch, which had lots of positive reviews online. There she spoke to protection adviser Matthew Moore and was relieved that he seemed to have an understanding of the condition.

Moore says: "Insurers are really fussy when it comes to income protection. It is the hardest type of cover to get because it is the one that people are most likely to claim on."

With critical illness cover, for example, you can only claim if you develop certain serious conditions, whereas income protection is more comprehensive and offers a regular income if your doctor decides that you are unable to work, he explains.

"But I was aware of one insurer that had recently started offering cover for people with diabetes – not for the diabetes itself, but if you are not able to work because of another illness."

Moore went through all the health questionnaires with Collins and she didn't have to speak to the insurer directly. She says it was an enormous relief when she was finally accepted.

"Moore was brilliant and it was all set up really quickly. I'm paying around £30 a month, which is a reasonable premium – I expected it to be much more. It has been a godsend.

"Being diabetic there is a lot to think about and this is one less worry. There is quite a large diabetes community online and whenever anyone says they are struggling to get life insurance or income protection I always give them Matthew's number. I think there needs to be a lot more awareness about what is available."

2025’s Top Rated Firms

We are delighted to share the 131 firms who qualified as Top Rated in 2025.

The Top Rated Firm qualification is very stringent.

These firms invited all their clients to review them on VouchedFor, received a high response rate, and excellent ratings. They also use our Elevation system (which involves a low monthly fee) to monitor their client experience and perform well vs industry benchmarks in areas like client advocacy and regulatory risk.

Firms of any size can qualify, from one-person operations to national firms. Reading clients' feedback for these firms reaffirms the value of good advice: bringing peace of mind and helping people reach their goals, whether that be buying their dream home, protecting their family, retiring in comfort or something else.

This is important when, despite some 'green shoots' in the form of reducing inflation and strengthening stock markets, there is still much uncertainty to navigate.

Many congratulations to all the firms who attained Top Rated status in 2025.

A message from 2050

Hello from 2050.

It’s you – yes, you – from the future. I want to thank you for making one of our wisest decisions: finding a financial adviser.

That choice changed everything. It turned late-night worries into confident plans. It gave us the freedom to build our business, explore the world, and care for our family.

Our adviser was more than a financial expert – they understood our dreams and helped bring them to life.

And behind them? The right technology to make it happen.

Today, as I watch our grandchildren thrive, I understand what a great decision it’s been. The future we hoped for didn’t just happen – it started with you.

Yours, gratefully,

You
